THE PRESS AND PARTY CONVENTIONS.

The fact that the leading, self-supporting, and responsible public journals of the country represent the parties for which they speak, has long been an accepted truth in the politics of all countries that have a free press and free ballot. Newspapers become independent and self-supporting in just the degree that they faithfully represent, at least, the reading and thinking members of their party. They flourish in subscriptions and advertisements, in income and patronage, in popularity and influence, in just the degree that they fail to pursue a course that commends itself to the intelligent judgment of their readers. And, inasmuch as the direct patronage necessary to the support of a first-class daily journal, either as subscribers, casual or regular buyers, and advertisers, number thousands and tens of thousands of persons in all walks of life, it follows that a successful daily journal is really the most representative institution in the world. It has established chords of sympathy, correspondence, and communication with about every voter and non-voter within the range of its circulation. It has a record of its own, which it is bound by the necessities of its position to maintain. Upon the integrity of its record, rests the [illegible] ... investment. Individuals may rise or fall; blaze out into popularity or pass into obscurity; be made Presidents to-day and be deemed unfit for any office to-morrow. No successful newspaper, therefore, can afford to be loyal to any individual. It may approve his well-doing, but it must point out his defects, however high in social station, in office, or in popularity he may be; and however harshly such rebuke may grate upon the tastes of some portion of its readers. [illegible] ... to it for information. They will only support one that can instruct them; not merely repeat what is already part of their common stock of knowledge. Now, as two persons are thoroughly informed and the other less informed relative to the topic, and better fully agree about it, so it is true that a newspaper which makes honest and independent use of all its sources of information will often, and, indeed, almost always, oppose the views of some of its readers.

It must fulfil the same duty which Edmund Burke demanded of the statesman, viz., that he should be "a pillar of the State, strong, steadfast, supporting, and in harmony with the proportions and object of the structure, not a mere weathercock on the top of the edifice, useful only to point the veering and shifting of every fashionable gale." To public opinion, indeed, a newspaper is really responsible; but who would think of consulting either of the party conventions that recently assembled in Chicago as exponents of public opinion? Such a convention is even shorter lived than the individuals composing it. The primaries, in which it was born, were held on one day and the convention breathed out its whole life and died on the next. Two days comprise the whole of its little life which was barely long enough to enable it to recognize its parents—Ruffianism and Bribery. Its constituent individuals then dispersed, and a large portion of them will hold themselves free to correct, at the polls, the mistakes that were made in convention, and vote for a better candidate, if they are not paid to vote for a worse one.

Is anybody surprised that the leading newspapers of both parties in Chicago care more for the honor and consistency of their own record, before their patrons, the tax-payers, than they do for these transient assemblages which call themselves "the party"? They could not possibly do otherwise. Newspapers that are not self-supporting are much like the bummer politicians in the convention. They represent nothing but losing stockholders, hungering for a bribe, and unpaid bills, threatening dissolution. Like Oliver Twist, they are under the double necessity of living upon charity, and yet "asking for more," because charity soup is so amazingly thin! Such papers may tie to conventions, though they represent only the sentiments, wishes and needs of two days of corruption, ... and small gossip. They scarcely represent more themselves. But journals which have become institutions of the ... which stand among the heaviest ... of their districts, which have for years been building up a credit, good will, and reputation among business men by a careful regard for what they believed to be for the public interest, cannot be led ... by money and a few hours' manipulation of a board of scallawags calling themselves a county convention.

We stoop to no apologies for our position. We regard all parties as useful ... as they elect good men to public ... We regard all conventions in ... as they nominate good ... The Chicago Times justly denounced ... of the nominees of its party as ... stupid, dishonest, and ... It does its duty in that respect ... whatever anybody ... [illegible]

[illegible] ... of one more incapable member. The Representatives of this kind we have in the party, the better it will be ... the integrity and discernment of the nation of the Republican party to believe they can be ... down the same abyss over which the Democracy of New York have gone. Nor let it be supposed that we can maintain our power here by electing such men to office. The sole condition on which the Republican party can carry Cook County is that of making respectable nominations, in the interests of economy and rectitude.

By the resolution of the Democratic Central Committee, to make no nomination for Congress, the contest is narrowed down to an issue between two Republicans, John Wentworth and C. B. Farwell. John Wentworth has personal talent, power, originality, and sagacity. Upon the main question, he represents honesty and economy. He will make good appointments. He has not procured his own nomination. Politically, he holds a medium course, never swerving far from that which the majority of the people will endorse. In asking all tax-payers to vote for him, as against Mr. Farwell, we believe we shall receive the endorsement of the majority of them at the next election, and of two-thirds of the remainder after the election is over.

A DUMB CONGRESSMAN.

If there ever was a time in the history of Chicago when it needed a man in Congress capable of understanding, explaining, and defending her claims in Congress, it is now. For all practical purposes, we might as well send a deaf and dumb man to Congress as Mr. Charles B. Farwell. His forte is business, where but little is said, no matter how large the transactions may be. His habits and associations, his education, and his experience, his abilities, and capacities are all foreign to those which qualify a man to represent this metropolis in the Congress of the United States. So far as he would represent Charles B. Farwell, of the house of Farwell & Co., perhaps he would do so as well as any other person; but, if elected at all, he is to be elected to represent all the other merchants, and all the other interests in Chicago. For this duty, he is wholly unqualified.

The census of 1870 establishes the ascendancy of the West in the affairs of the government. Political power is to be transferred from the Atlantic slope to the Mississippi Valley. In this new apportionment of power, and in its exercise upon the affairs of the nation, Chicago is to take a prominent part. The whole country is agitated. Chicago has rivals, and envious ones, in all directions. Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, and even Dubuque, are represented, and will continue to be represented, by men able to speak for, and able to defend, their constituents and their districts. The duties of a member of Congress are two-fold. First, if he is of any use as a Representative, he must be a good committee man, not only able to take care of all interests referred to the committee of which he is a member, but able to attend to, watch, and promote, interests in the keeping of other committees. He must also be an attentive and watchful member in the House. He must be able, promptly, readily, and clearly, to explain a pending proposition, and to give the reasons for or against it. He must be able to comprehend the force and operation of the language of a bill, or of a proposed amendment, and must be ready with pen or speech, or both, to suggest modifications, propose changes, and to give his reasons therefor. He must do this in person. He cannot call in an attendant bummer to do it for him; he will not be allowed to hire an attorney, or diplomat, or backman to speak for him. He must do all this personally; and, if he be unable to do it, this city might as well be represented by one of the marble statues in the rotunda of the Capitol.

Can Mr. Farwell do any of these things? He cannot speak six consecutive sentences coherently to save his life. In debate, he would be as dumb as an oyster, and in a House where influence and position are largely the result of ability as a debater, he would be about as useful as one of the wooden Indians which advertise the places where tobacco is sold. Cincinnati will be represented in the next Congress by two able lawyers. St. Louis will be represented by two first-class speakers. Milwaukee proposes to take a Judge from the bench and send him to Washington. Toledo, Buffalo, and Detroit will all be represented by men of ability, who will have the capacity to explain what they want, or to oppose what is injurious to their districts. Shall Chicago be the only silent city in the National Assembly?

A REAL ESTATE JOB.

Last winter the Board of Public Works advertised for proposals of a site on which to erect the new pumping works. Offers were made, and the board reported in favor of a particular site. The matter was referred to a committee of the Council, and that committee was unable to agree—two members reporting in favor of one site, two in favor of another, and the fifth not understanding the subject. It was then referred to a select committee of nine members, composed of the following Aldermen:

1. McGrath, Fifteenth Ward.
2. Holden, Tenth Ward.
3. ... & Powell, Seventh Ward.
4. Tracey, Sixth Ward.
5. Whitaker, Fifth Ward.
6. McAvoy, Fourth Ward.
7. Bengley, Eighteenth Ward.
8. McCauley, Nineteenth Ward.
9. Kehoe, Twentieth Ward.

This committee, after seeing, and being seen, by everybody interested, made three reports:

Alderman Holden reported in favor of the purchase of a lot on Loomis street, containing 114,000 square feet, at a fraction over 59 cents per square foot, or for the aggregate sum of $68,000.

Aldermen McAvoy and Whitaker reported in favor of purchasing the lots on the river known as the Hilliard-Hopkinson lots, previously recommended by the Board of Public Works, containing together 197,382 square feet, for 46½ cents per square foot, or, in the aggregate, $92,000.

Aldermen McGrath, Bengley, Powell, Kehoe, and McCauley reported in favor of purchasing the O'Neill lot, containing 91,561 square feet, for $97,800, or $1.06 per square foot. As this lot is too small for the purpose, they advise the purchase of an adjoining one, which, with the O'Neill lot, will make an aggregate of 111,000 square feet, for the total sum of $119,800, or a fraction over $1.07 per square foot.

It will be seen that the lots recommended by the majority of the committee are to cost $1.07 per square foot, against 59 cents and 46 cents per square foot for the competing lots.

The public will inquire in vain why this extraordinary recommendation was made. What is the consideration which demands that the city shall purchase one lot at more than double the price at which another and equally eligible lot in every respect is offered? Three members of the committee refused to be a party to the transparent fraud. One other refused to sign the recommendation, though he did not protest against it. What was the consideration which induced these other men to make such a recommendation? Three of them live on the North Side, and can have no local prejudices on the subject. One of them lives in the Fifteenth Ward. Between two sites, each having a river front and equally adapted to the purpose needed, what was there to justify the recommendation that the city pay $1.07 per foot for one, when the other was offered at 46 cents? [illegible]

[illegible] ... disgraceful ... of dishonest jobbers, in and out of the Common Council, has not been tried for some time.

"Some grievances we have urged why we would be glad to advocate Mr. Wentworth's nomination to Congress, and we oppose him now, not because of any lack of confidence in his Republicanism, or in his ability as a Representative, but entirely because Mr. Farwell is the regular candidate of the Republican party."—Evening Journal.

It would be difficult to show wherein Mr. Wentworth is not as "regular" a candidate as Mr. Farwell. He has received the unanimous nomination of the trades union organization, which is largely composed of industrious and respectable Republican mechanics; he has been invited by the farmers of the county, who are nearly all Republicans, to be a candidate; and he has been pressed, on all sides, by the 12,000 Republicans who supported the citizens' ticket last fall to consent to run. Finally, 3,000 citizens, of all parties, waited on him at Metropolitan Hall, last Saturday evening, for the purpose of ascertaining his views on men and things in general; and, after hearing what he had to say, were entirely satisfied therewith, and insisted on his acceptance of the nomination tendered to him, and then and there he was persuaded to reply in the affirmative, and consent to run.

It will be seen from these facts that Mr. Wentworth has been nominated much more than Farwell has, and is fairly and legitimately before the people as a candidate for Congress. Mr. Farwell is only the nominee of a fraction of the Republican party, and that the smaller one. He is the chief of the barnacle clique, whom the Journal vigorously fought at the last election. The other wing of the party had nothing to do with his nomination, and is under no party obligations to vote for him, while they are under the strongest moral obligations to vote against him. In a merely party point of view, he had no business to be a candidate, in the face of the notorious and determined opposition in the party against him. If his desire had been to promote harmony and unity in our ranks, he would have kept out of the fight. By thrusting himself upon the ticket at this time, he has prevented the much-desired reconciliation, and compelled Mr. Wentworth to run as the anti-barnacle candidate to save the larger half of the party from humiliation and degradation. This, however, is the least of the grounds of objection to him. If he were otherwise a fit person to be elected to Congress, the difficulty of last fall would have constituted no valid reason for any person voting against him.

The Journal confesses its confidence in Mr. Wentworth's Republicanism, and concedes his ability as a Representative. There is no sacrifice of principle in supporting him. No Republican is liable to the charge of "bolting" his party in voting for him; on the contrary, he will be supporting a better Republican, and a vastly better man for Representative in Congress, than his opponent. We trust the Journal will reconsider its position, and support the man whom, at heart, it desires to see elected.

The opinion that prevailed in the city yesterday among the knowing ones was that "Long John would 'raise' Charley Farwell about 10,000 majority in the district. At the Republican campaign headquarters it was pretty generally admitted that Farwell would be badly beaten. Nearly all the runners and bummers brought in word from the various wards that the current was everywhere setting strongly in Wentworth's favor. Judd and Gassette, in private conversation, "gave it up."

The only thing they are fighting for now is to keep down Wentworth's majority. Farwell himself has lost confidence, and his anxious countenance betrays that he feels whipped already. His backers are all fearfully demoralized—including the editor of the Zeitung. If Farwell was a man of moral courage, and had a wise regard for his own standing in the party, he would withdraw from the ticket, on the ground of his being a non-resident of the district, and quietly retire to his Lake Forest villa.

The respectable gentlemen who have the Republican ticket in charge have yielded to the demands of public decency, so far as to force Keefe and Hugh Reid to resign the nominations they had obtained. Let them not be weary in well-doing. The question of power is no longer an open one. They have exercised it in these two cases, and, of course, can do it in others. It is all very well to talk of the "patriotism" of Messrs. Reid and Keefe; but everybody knows that these men were forced off by the demand of the respectable men on the ticket, to get rid of the apparent disgrace of their association. Now let Mr. Farwell resign also.

The Republican Executive Committee, at whose head is the barnacle Gassette, has done nothing but commit blunders and waste money since its appointment. If it keeps on as it has begun, it will defeat every candidate on the ticket. If it had an ounce of sense or sagacity, it would have removed Farwell, Dixon, Phelps, Humphrey, Hayfield, Senne, Reid, Keefe, and some other dead weights, from the ticket a week ago, and replaced them with strong, popular men. But the committee is stricken with factional blindness, and is more intent in "punishing" Republicans who supported the citizens' movement, last fall, than in strengthening the ticket and rallying a united party.

We advise all of our citizens, who can obtain entrance to Farwell Hall this evening, to go and hear Judge Trumbull. Mr. Trumbull's Springfield speech, which we published a few days since, has attracted wide attention for its elevated tone, its statesmanlike reasoning, and its adaptation to the issues of the present day. We have no doubt that his remarks this evening will be equally profound and pertinent, for Senator Trumbull never fails to honor the position which he fills, and to illuminate any subject which he discusses.

From the grimaces and contortions of the Post, it is obvious that it regrets having committed itself to Farwell, but it feels in duty bound to make a show of supporting him. The "support" it gives him consists chiefly in jawing at THE TRIBUNE, republishing old editorials from the files of this paper, and firing off squibs and Chinese crackers at John Wentworth. We don't see how that kind of support is going to make any votes for Farwell, and presume it is not intended it shall.

Mr. Hugh Reid, nominee, on the Republican ticket, for Collector of South Chicago, perceiving that there was a general desire among Republicans for his declination, has had the manliness to withdraw from the ticket. In his card he says:

"To promote the harmony and success of the Republican party, I hereby withdraw my name as a candidate for South Town Collector."

If the man who induced him to be a candidate, and whose influence put him on the ticket, would now imitate Mr. Reid, he would save himself from the mortification of defeat, and, at the same time, "promote the harmony and success of the Republican party."

At the close of his speech, on Saturday evening, when Mr. Wentworth entered upon his campaign with so much eclat, he announced that he had still a good deal more to say. To-night he will say it at Burlington Hall, corner of Sixteenth and State streets, and we advise people who don't like to be crowded to keep away.

It is easy to see that the reform begun by Secretary Cox, in forbidding forced assessments for party purposes on office-holders, must be carried through. The Republican party must walk up and "toe the mark" on the whole civil service principle, or succumb to the party that will. What is such a forced assessment, in effect, but forcing the whole people to pay, by taxation, the expense of running one political party against another. For, suppose the fair pay of a clerk to be $2,000 a year, but he is taxed $200 a year for party purposes. He will ... [illegible]

[illegible] ... They will vote the clerk $2,000 for his services, and $200 out of the public Treasury to pay tribute to stamp for the Republican party. This is a new function of taxation. It can be applied just as potently in behalf of any other party that may happen to come in power in State or nation as in behalf of the Republican. It is simply a form of tax-stealing, and Secretary Cox makes the best possible record in resisting it.

We thought the Irish member of Parliament was witty when he remarked: "Mr. Speaker; I smell a rat, I see him floating in the air. But, mark me, I shall nip him in the bud." But the Spectator, an insurance advertiser, gravely says:

"Life insurance, like the true nature of the plant, has outlived its popularity among the [illegible], and has become a stony soil to cultivate."

We have made some criticisms upon life insurance, but we never attempted to "cultivate the stony soil" which an ignis fatuus becomes, after it has outlived its popularity.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

CAVE LAKE, U. T., Oct. 2.

This morning, September 18, we are in the Grand Canon by the side of the roaring Colorado, six thousand feet below our camp, on the mountain side, which is eighteen miles away. But the miles of horizontal distance represent but a small part of the day's labor before us. It is the six thousand feet of altitude we must gain that makes it a monstrous task. We are up early; a little bread and coffee, and we begin our climb, carrying with us a little water in the camp kettle, that we may have some coffee on the summit of the first cliff, where our horses were left. By daylight we find much more easy ways, and in two hours we are up, but it was two hours of great labor. And now our coffee is a boon. We find this morning that half a dozen men can repair the trail along the cliff in two or three days, and so we have discovered another way by which rations can be taken to the river. This is the fifth point for supplies. So far, I have had success beyond all hope. We saddle our horses and start. Up we climb the second cliff. Up this we go by easy stages, leaving the animals. Now we reach the stinking water-pockets. Our ponies have had no water for thirty hours, and are eager even for this foul fluid. We first carefully strain a kettleful for ourselves, then divide what is left between them; two or three gallons each they have, but this does not satisfy them, and they rage around and refuse to eat the scanty grass. We boil our kettle of water, and skim it. Straining, boiling, and skimming makes it a little better, for it was full of loathsome wriggling worms, with big black heads. But plenty of coffee takes away the bad smell, and so modifies the taste that most of us can drink it. ... [illegible]

Mr. Hamblin fell into conversation with one of the men, and held him until the others had left, and then learned more of the particulars of the death of the three men. They came upon the Indian village almost starved and exhausted with fatigue. They were supplied with food and put on their way to the settlements. Shortly after they had left, an Indian from the east side of the Colorado arrived at their village, and told them about a number of miners killing a squaw in a drunken brawl, and no doubt these were some of the men. No person had ever come down the canon; that was impossible; they were trying to hide their guilt. In this way he worked them into a great rage; they followed, surrounded the men in ambush, and filled them full of arrows.

That night I slept in peace, although these murderers of my men and their friends, the Uinkarets, were sleeping not five hundred yards away. While we were gone to the canon, the pack train, and supplies enough to make an Indian rich beyond his wildest dreams, were all left in their charge, and all was safe; not even a lump of sugar was pilfered by the children.

Sept. 20.—For several days we have been discussing the relative merits of several names for these mountains. The Indians call them Wing-ka-reta—the region of pines, and we adopt the name. The great mountain we call Mount Trumbull, in honor of the Senator. To-day the train starts back to the canon we came over, while Captain Bishop and I climb Mount Trumbull. [illegible]

Colorado and Wyoming—Why Colorado Should be Admitted as a State.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 22.

While I was in Denver, the other day, a company was organized, with F. B. Chaffee as President, to build a railroad into the Boulder coal field, which is fifteen or twenty miles from the line of the Denver Pacific. It will be done at once, and in time, doubtless, continued up Boulder Creek to the mines on the heads of that stream. The discovery, in that vicinity, during the last summer, of a very rich silver lode, is one of the most striking illustrations of Colorado life. Prospectors "have been over the ground" every month for ten years without seeing the diamond in the grass roots. [illegible]

The discovery of this lode was the sensation of the past season in mining circles. It is said to vary in thickness from one to four feet, to be traceable for a mile or two on the surface, and to pay in silver about $300 per ton. The discoverers sold a half interest a few weeks since for $75,000, and because they are taking out perhaps $1,000 a day out of it, clear, Prof. Hill, of Black Hawk, purchasing and reducing the ore.

Central City is the headquarters of mining activity in Colorado. It is the metropolis of probably the richest mining district on the globe. But it has been afflicted for years with foreign corporations, who appear to have managed their affairs for the most part with the view of swindling their stockholders, rather than making money in mining. Let me illustrate.

The Combination Silver Mining Company was organized under the general incorporation law of New York, in 1865. It paid $250,000 for property on the High Bridge Lode, at Belmont, Nye County, Nevada, ... [illegible]

COLORADO AT THE DOOR OF THE UNION.

Colorado has received a permanent increase of population the past season of at least 5,000. The vote at the late election was 61 per cent larger than in 1868. [illegible]

[illegible] ... With this addition to her population, or without it, Colorado will ask, next winter, for an enabling act, such as Congress offered her in 1864. The people of the Territory are self-reliant, well-organized, socially and politically, bright, enterprising, ambitious, and spirited. The interests of the section are in a good degree national. It has produced $50,000,000 to $80,000,000 in gold and silver; it has paid three-fourths of a million dollars into the public coffers. Years ago it raised and equipped armies. It furnished more than the quota of troops for the war, and this without any draft. Its taxable wealth is between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. It is the favorite field for railroad enterprises. Improvement in the Mines of Treasure Hill—Work in the Eberhardt—Silver in the Ward Beecher—Negotiations for the Purchase of the Latter Mine—Increase of Smelting Facilities—The Water-Lined Furnace—Rogers' Joint-Stock Smelting Company Proposed—New Discoveries of Base Metal Mines—Condition of the District.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

SHERMANTOWN, Nev., Oct. 18.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE MINES OF TREASURE HILL.

Those persons who have adopted the theory that the mines of Treasure Hill are rich in silver only near the surface, and that they will gradually and finally be exhausted of paying ore, are continually having their opinion negatived in the most positive manner by new discoveries in the oldest locations, and at greater depths from the surface than any yet reached. The new English Eberhardt Company have been prospecting the old Keystone shaft in their mine, and, last week, struck a body of ore in no degree inferior to the earlier discoveries in the same mine. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Aurora South, belonging to the Stanford Mill Company, continues to yield bountifully of very rich ore.

INCREASE OF SMELTING FACILITIES.

Besides the three furnaces of the Rothschild Smelting Company, now in operation, there is to be immediately set up a water-lined cupola near Swansea, in the Base range, and the two furnaces of the Magary Company, at Hamilton, have been leased, and will soon be running out bullion. [illegible]

DESCRIPTION OF A WATER-LINED FURNACE.

Mr. Haskell, a machinist of San Francisco, has conceived the idea of a smelting furnace, for reducing copper ores in Mariposa and Fresno Counties, California, so that it should require but one operation to produce the metal in pigs directly from the ore. [illegible]

[illegible]

Messrs. F. W. Jackson & Co., however, are not the only parties about to use Haskell's water-lined cupola. Adam Hall & J. M. Robertson, of Eureka District, have one which will be fired up this week. The results in both will be received with great interest by miners and smelters here and elsewhere.

NEW DISCOVERIES OF BASE METAL MINES.

On the spurs of Treasure Hill, and on the western slope of White Pine Mountain, several very valuable mines of carbonate ores have recently been opened, and their product is already in the market. [illegible]

In the Base Metal range proper, one or two good veins have recently been discovered, and in one old location, the "Miner's Dream," a new and large deposit has been found.

CONDITION OF THE DISTRICT.

The miners have had a good deal to complain of in the low prices offered them for the ore by the various smelting companies; and there are but few now at work in comparison with the number actually engaged in mining for base ores a year ago. [illegible]

The property of the whole State of Nevada is dependent upon cheap transportation to and from its mining districts.

EUREKA.

The separating works of the Rothschild Smelting Company are not yet completed, but will be in about a month. [illegible]

At Eureka, also, separating works are being erected by the former Superintendent of the Auburn Mill at Reno, Mr. J. J. Dunne.

Eberhardt City, where the Stanford and New Eberhardt Mills are located, is increasing in population.

We are having our Indian summer. October is the finest month in the year in White Pine.

GRANT AND LEE'S ARMIES.

Letter from General Badeau.

The London Standard of Oct. 12 publishes the following letter from General Badeau:

"My attention has recently been drawn to an editorial article in the Standard for [illegible], which is devoted to General Robert E. Lee. I have of course no right, and certainly no desire, to depreciate the estimate put by the Standard upon either the personal or the military character of General Lee; but as the article in question contains several statements evidently based upon misinformation, I venture to ask that you will allow me to correct them in your columns. I have the less hesitation in making this request, because my principal authority for the proposed corrections is that of General Lee himself.

All the original documents still in existence which once belonged to the Southern War Office, are now in the possession of the United States Government; for, very soon after the capture of Richmond, they were, by the express direction of Mr. Jefferson Davis, surrendered by General Joseph E. Johnston to General Sherman. As Military and Private Secretary to General Grant from the time when he took command of the armies of the United States until he became President, I have had for years unrestricted access, not only to his own official papers, but to all these captured archives, and have had ... Amendments to the Proposed New Revenue Law.

From the Springfield (Ill.) Journal, Oct. 9.

The following important amendment to the proposed new revenue law, passed by the State Board of Equalization, at its late session in this city, was presented by Judge Platt, of said board, from Jo Daviess County. The amendment was ordered to be incorporated into the bill, and, as it is a subject of great importance to the counties along the line of the Illinois Central Road, as well as other localities, as being a means of producing a large amount of State and local revenue, we publish it for the benefit of our readers:

MONETARY.

MONDAY EVENING, Oct. 31.

The week opens with considerable improvement in the aspect of business. The principal cause of this is that the grain—particularly wheat—which has been accumulating in store here has begun to move out freely, and, during the last three business days, the amount of grain in our warehouses has been largely reduced. This is releasing considerable capital, and enables the banks to assist other branches of trade.
